

I'm opposed to allowing the use of cellular phones on planes, simply from the perspective of "too much noise."

For some reason, people tend to talk more loudly when they're using a cell phone. I'm hard of hearing and wear hearing aids. The hearing aids amplify the louder voices, making them uncomfortably loud.

My only recourse is to remove the hearing aids or turn them off, which means that I would be unable to hear any announcements that were made.

To subject passengers to others' cell phone conversations, with no means of escape, would be cruel.
